WILMER, B.C., THURSDAY, JULY 24, 1902.

The banquet tendered Captain Armstrong Saturday evening showed that the appreciation of his indomitable energy is not altogether local as the report published elsewhere proves that representatives from long distances were present to make the best of the opportunity. Captain Armstrong accomplished a feat which few men would even contemplate let alone try, in bringing the steamer North Star through to Columbia river. His natural innate delicacy compelled him to confer the honors upon those men who assisted him, but that is not altogether allowable for it was he who undertook the difficult task and deserved the acknowledgement tendered.

There was really no argument in the letter signed by "Liberal" published in our last issue. A bare statement for or against anything is not convincing. "Liberal" may be a great jester, but he can gain little fame without proof. If he is in earnest he has touched upon two matters that it would be interesting to have him discuss thoroughly, and he will be given every opportunity in these columns.

"Liberal" infers that it would be of interest to one company only to have the natural channel below Wilmer dredged and that it would not be of general benefit. To this it is only necessary to point out that it will be beneficial to every man doing business in the town and the manager of our biggest shipping mine states positively that he will erect permanent ore sheds that will be so constructed that they will be filled from the hillside automatically and by gravity the ore will be loaded on the boats, and we are informed another big property will do the same. Then Dominion Engineer Keefer examined the channel and so much did he approve of it that he ordered that it be proceeded with. Resident Engineer Aylmer approved of it as he recommended that a portion of it be done by teams and scrapers. It is now "Liberal's" duty to show how little these men know and wherein the benefit is not general.

As to the road which he says "was not a necessity" he should be as liberal as the Golden Board of Trade and drive over the old and new grades.

The visit of the Golden Board of Trade members last week should prove beneficial to the Windermere District. Some of them had never visited the district before and the result was an "eye-opener."

Their visit at this time besides of a general nature had a definite purpose. The Golden people have always in a way extended a paternal hand to this district and some over-zealous member of the Board of Trade thought they should chastise us when we were not good, and introduced a resolution to ensure the Government for constructing the new grade down Toby creek hill. They had a good deal of discussion over it, but the better judgment of the majority prevailed and an invitation from Capt. Armstrong was accepted to come up on the North Star and see the road for themselves and the district generally.

The members who came were driven up the old grade to the three-mile post and from there down the new grade and allowed to draw their own conclusions. In the evening all the visiting members called at THE OUTCROP office and not one of them said anything against the building of the new grade, but several took the opportunity to express their approval and acknowledged that it was a necessity.

One member said that the difference in the two surveys right from the three-mile post was so plain that it was very difficult to understand why the old grade was ever built.

To this it may be fair to point out that a view to economy and directness may have had somewhat to do with its construction as several properties ship their ore to Atholmer and traffic from and to that direction has and always will amount to a great deal.

The visit from the Board of Trade will materially aid in bringing the two ends of the district into closer touch and it would be well for the business men of the two divisions to arrange for a meeting to discuss the interests of the whole district.

LIFE'S HEROES.

There was a man who fought and died
And died at last as a hero died.
Who followed the flag wherever it flew,
But left a wife in his native land.

To struggle and strive for her daily bread;

But he was a soldier! God! How grand!

He answered his country's call to go

To fight in the war with courage and pride.

That his heart was a brave man's child;

And the leading of a helpless wife

He felt with his heart in his fighting day.

And the cheer of cannon and clash of steel

We heard from a hero and noble of him

Who was a hero and noble of him

on Blackford, "I put my reputation on the statement that that's a better quarter section 'an' mine this side an' Sandy Bay."

"Ah, I see that you have mistaken my meaning," said Hope sadly. "I was speaking of the Battle of the Marston."

"We call that land above here better an' richer bottom?" Stronger, you don't know good land when you see it. Why, does my cat; it won't sprout picky pears."

"It pains me to say that you are a long way from home," said Hope, with a melancholy shake of the head.

"I don't know nothing about the town you mentioned, but it ain't but seven miles from here to Wicket."

Hope growled.

"I was speaking of the Heavenly Land, where there is no sorrow or death," he said.

Blackford looked completely lost.

"Why, are you only a person after all?"

"I am a minister of the gospel."

A Tale of Night.

The golden gleams of a new day shot

Through the window of the room.

He was the son of a cattle man. He

Had stayed in the game all through the new year.

He had killed a cowhide the week before. The coat was sold in the market place. Then he killed the cow.

When he heard the news of the cow he had money to burn. But William did not burn bills.

He met a man with a wall who taught him to play pin pots for five dollars a side.

In the early morn the man with the wall took the fifth year with three new.

William had two new himself. He had them out since since the game commenced.

The man slowly folded his ten and to away.

It was all there was left to steal.

Out on the cold still night. William took forth a pack of "new winner"

playing cards he had bought through an advertisement in a pack paper.

He took a good long look at the cards and laid them on the ground.

The box stood on the burning dock.
